Response to Arguments

- 1. Applicant's arguments filed 21 December 2007 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.
- 2. Addressing applicant's arguments that the prior art of Hansen does not disclose any "designer location". The examiner respectfully disagrees. The examiner is interpreting the job preparation workstations 116, which are located in the print shop as being the designer location.
- 3. Addressing the applicant's arguments that the prior art of Hansen does not teach "creating at the designer location a digital file that represents an image to be printed". The examiner respectfully disagrees. As stated in col. 5, lines 47-65, all documents are converted into a print ready file format such as PDF, PS, and PCL. These files are interpreted as the examiner as being the digital file that represents an image to be printed.
- 4. Addressing the applicant's arguments that the prior art of Hansen does not teach "receiving at the designer location form the print service provider location real time configuration information regarding a print production device at the print service provider location". The examiner respectfully disagrees. As stated in col. 7, lines 63-67 and col. 8, lines 1-6, the print server directs the print jobs based on attributes, load balancing, and print protocols. As stated in col. 7, lines 42-46, the print server is coupled to the job preparation stations. It is being understood by the examiner that the information exchanged between the print server and the job preparation stations is done in real time since the job queuing is dependent on the present load of the output device.

- 5. Addressing the applicant's arguments that Hansen does not teach "generating at the designer location packaging instructions that describe how the printed output is to be packaged for shipment after printing, the packaging instructions being generated relative to the received configuration information". The examiner respectfully disagrees. As stated in col. 8, lines 7-20, there are varying degrees of finishing the final document. The finishing of the document is being interpreted by the examiner as being the packaging of the document.
- 6. Addressing the applicant's argument that the prior art of Hansen does not teach "creating at the designer location a high performance file that contains the digital file and the packaging instructions". The examiner respectfully disagrees. As stated in col. 5, lines 11-17, an electronic job ticket is created at the store front computer 114 containing all of the instructions for completing a printing task. The store front computers are coupled with the job preparation stations. Job preparation involves prepa5ing the document according to the instructions in the ticket.
- 7. Addressing the applicant's arguments that the prior art of Hansen does not teach "submitting the high performance file from the designer location to the print service provider via an electronic network". The examiner respectfully disagrees. As stated in col. 7, lines 42-46, the print server 120 is coupled with the job preparation stations 116 and the network server 118 over the network 112.
- 8. Addressing the applicant's arguments that the prior art of Hansen does not teach "packaging the printed output at the printed output at the print service provider location in accordance with the packaging instructions contained within the high performance file" The examiner respectfully disagrees. As stated in col. 8, lines 7-20, there are varying degrees of finishing the final document. The finishing of the document is being interpreted by the examiner as being the packaging of the document.
